Introduction

Positive psychology is a growing movement in psychology that focuses on people's strengths and virtues and on psychological factors that are thought to lead to positive outcomes. In recent years, there has been an increased focus on positive psychology applying in a variety of settings, such as education (e.g., primary schools, secondary schools, colleges, and universities), healthcare (e.g., family medicine, cancer care, and rehabilitation), and corporations (e.g., organizational behaviour). Positive Psychology is the psychology of personal growth, happiness and positive personal qualities. It encompasses four basic areas of study and practice, namely, (1) positive experiences, (2) positive character strengths, (3) positive relationships, and (4) positive institutions that facilitate their development:

- Positive experiences include the mental states of flow and mindfulness and emotions about the present (e.g., pleasure, contentment, laughter), past (e.g., nostalgia, satisfaction, pride), and future (e.g., hope, optimism). The distinction among the pleasant life, the good life, and the meaningful life are drawn.
- Positive character strengths include wisdom, courage, compassion, love, humanity, justice, temperance, self-efficacy, resilience, grit, imagination, creativity, and spirituality/transcendence. The classification of these virtues is explored.
- Positive relationships include the factors that enhance meaning and well-being among couples, family, friends, co-workers, and the community.
- Positive institutions are represented by positive education, positive work environments, healthy families, humane leadership, and the development of civic virtues.

The Certificate in Positive Psychology programme provides an introduction to the core concepts and fundamental principles of positive psychology, including its philosophical approach and its practical applications. Throughout the programme, students explore the research and practice that make up the foundation of positive psychology. The implementation of positive psychology based exercises may contribute to positive mental wellness, increasing psychological assets and resourcefulness.
